Tel: 619-352-4977 email: info@czs-lewiscenter.org ELAINE HÄKKIMÄKI Executive Director The Lewis Center for the Arts is a nonprofit public arts institution in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Established in 1976, the Center has become a rich cultural resource for New Mexico, expanding from its original focus on traditional and contemporary theater and dance, to include the visual arts, music, and the arts of performance and creative writing. With a gallery and administrative offices located in the heart of downtown Albuquerque, the Center also houses its nationally recognized community arts center, 4th Street Studios, located at 55 W. 4th Street in the historic building formerly occupied by the Pueblo Theater. Artistic programming at the Center is supported by seven seasonal arts venues; the V Lounge, a 400-seat music and comedy venue located in the Center's 4th Street Studios; the Alvarado Club, an intimate 200-seat jazz lounge located in the Center's 62nd Street Studios; the new 4th Street Cafe, featuring rock, country, and blues acts of all styles; the downtown Loft Gallery and Auditorium, which is home to numerous traveling performing artists and films; the gallery spaces in the Lewis Center for the Arts' three downtown Albuquerque locations, and the newly opened East Village Gallery and Cultural Center. ELAINE HÄKIMÄKI is the Executive Director of the Lewis Center for the Arts, founded in 1976. She came to the Center from her position as Executive Director of the Kansas City Art Institute, where she worked for 24 years. She has extensive experience in the arts and culture field and currently serves as a board member of the Artists' Fellowship of Greater Kansas City, Greater Kansas City Arts Commission, and Midwest Arts United, Inc. She is a graduate of Midwestern State University (Oklahoma) with a degree in Fine Arts and holds MFA and MA degrees in Philosophy of Art from the University of Kansas. She is also a contributing writer for ENKI Magazine. A native of Waco, Texas, ELAINE HÄKIMÄKI was born and raised in a home steeped in the arts. She trained as a painter with the late Arthur Bean (creator of the famous Arthur Bean Art Varsity teams) and then as a visual artist with the renowned Chicago artist Jack Smith. As a former dance teacher for the Chicago

Q: Word to describe breaking words like "I" I've been racking my brains trying to find a word for something that I'm aware of reading on a website. This is how I've been thinking of it: Imagine if you could force the following sentence to be read properly: "I have been studying Spanish for the last six months." Which looks like this when you read it: I have been studying Spanish for the last six months. However, changing the sentence to this: "I am Spanish" results in this: I am Spanish. So what word should I use to describe the process of changing one type of sentence to a different type of sentence that's also grammatically correct? I'd like to put a period at the end of the sentence when the word ends. I have been studying Spanish for the last six months. Here's the context: Imagine a word that describes the process of changing the following sentence into the first one I wrote. When I read it out loud, I would say "I have been studying Spanish for the last six months. (period)" A: I would call the process "restructuring". A: I would simply call this language change grammar. Also, this kind of grammar change is called a zero derivation, and it's not specific to language; it's also common in mathematics. A: I would call this process changing sentences into dialects. In this case, I don't mean a change of idiom, but a change of grammar. In Spanish the word for "I" is "yo", and a sentence like "I have been studying Spanish for the last six months." is normally transliterated to "Yo he estudiado español por los últimos seis meses.". So changing that sentence to the one you gave in the question would be considered a change of language. I don't think there's a term for that in English, because it's not really considered something you learn, and the concept of "idiom" doesn't really translate.
